

4 NEW YORK CITY RESIDENTIAL SPACES FOR LEAF-PEEPING THIS FALL

WATCH THE TREES CHANGE THIS SEASON AT THESE TOP RESIDENTIAL LOCATIONS

Fall's ambience has officially set upon New York signaled by the crisp breeze, cozy scarves and the breathtaking views of the trees changing into a gorgeous array of colors. For many New Yorkers, going upstate for leaf-peeping is an obvious choice, but the city itself can offer some of the best views this season. With residential buildings that offer notable outdoor spaces, from rooftops to terraces, residents don't have to go very far to take in the unique views of the city's stunning changing treetops.

1. CIRCA CENTRAL PARK

Circa Central Park, a condominium in Upper Manhattan, brought renowned architecture firm FXFOWLE on board to design the curved façade. The design offers exquisite floor-to-ceiling panoramic views of Central Park and the Manhattan skyline—allowing potential buyers to become one with nature. Situated right on the north end, the development will portray a biophilic design with a series of balconies that overlook the entire greenery of the park, experiencing the magic of change each season. This unique circular construction offers the “wow factor” to future residents allowing them to see the whole expanse of the park in one view, with a different light and shape of the sun each time they look. (Photo credit: Seventh Art)
